No. 1: dating table for the Catalogue of Small Finds from South Shields Roman Fort

by A. Croom

Version 3: 2025

Version 1: 2020

Version 2: 2024

The Catalogue of Small Finds from South Shields Roman Fort (Allason-Jones and Milet 1984) contains the finds from excavations in 1875-6, later chance discoveries during house-building (mainly from the period 1875-1881), with a few other objects found up to 1973. The finds-spot of a few of the finds is known, but the great majority could come from either the fort, vicus or cemetery.

This table includes updated information on the dating of the objects, more recent publications of individual items and, in some cases, changes in the identification of objects or materials.

Dating

Many of the objects labelled 'Roman?' or 'undated' could well be Roman as there was very little later occupation on the site, but they cannot be dated independently. However, it is clear that objects that might only have been a hundred years old at the time of their discovery were also kept and became part of the museum collections (such as handles from drawers).

The site has some Iron Age settlement (Hodgson et al 2001) as well as Roman. There is some limited activity on the site in the first half of the second-century, with widespread occupation only starting in *c.*163 with the building of the stone fort, and thereafter continued into the early fifth century. There are a small number of early medieval finds, but there was no medieval occupation in the immediate area of the fort, and the site was open fields until *c.*1874 (although there is an increased number of finds dating from the sixteenth century onwards). From 1875 onwards the area was gradually covered with terraced housing and a school.

This is an on-going project, as further refinements can be made (contact: contact@arbsoc.org.uk), and updated versions will be produced at intervals.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Karl Hardy and Lisa Napier for all their work on this project.
